

Class 4 English Literature Worksheet
Topic: Cooking With Salt Water II

Synopsis:

Amara was frightened, the Chief Sea was much larger than she had thought. When Amara reached, it was high tide and the cool water touched her dusty feet. With a shaky voice Amara asked the Chief Sea if she could fill her gourd. After filling her gourd she thanked the Chief Sea, she slung the gourd onto her back and she began her return journey.

At midday she reached a lookout point, halfway up the mountain. She was old so she had to rest. She kept her gourd down on the ground and wanted to thank the Chief Sea once again when she turned to look at the sea it was bare sand as far as she could see.

Amara trembled with fear, so she decided to return the salt water to the Chief Sea. Amara quickly struggled down the mountain trail, the heavy gourd bouncing against the bony back. Amara's feet finally touched the sand and she walked to the water's edge and emptied the gourd into the sea and she asked for forgiveness.

Amara hurried up the path as fast as her exhausted legs could carry her. She stopped at the same place for some rest when Amara gazed down the ocean, the sea water was lapping gently up the beach's highest point and the same stretch of sand was now covered under the Waves.

Amara was relieved and she knew that the Chief Sea was no longer angry with her as she filled him up again. She decided to cook without salt for a month, just like the other villagers. Such was Life.
